As the most important creation, we grow and change not only thru our bodies, but thru the images of ourselves.

Welcome to our first publication of the Photo Privé newsletter.

Welcome to Photo Privé. For our very first newsletter, we thought it be appropriate to introduce our services as a means of allowing women to have an outlet and enable them to create a piece of art of and for themselves.

Photo Privé was started by Ted Mishima, a photographer who has been involved professionally in photography since the early 80's. Starting out as a student of photography in college, then moving thru photos labs and assisting other photographers, he worked his way up from the bottom to professional photographer with his own business of, Mishima Photography, which was established in 1987. Working in the arenas of editorial, corporate, catalog and advertising photography, he has honed his skills enabling him to work under pressure and in situations not always suitable to creating great work.

Through his journey over the years, Ted has photographed people, portraits, in the studio and on location. His atypical view of situations always brings on a view of people not always in traditional ways. Seeing things differently enabled him to work on art photography, which has broadened his scope of seeing and what he photographs, even more so. With his love of photographing people, women, and art, Photo Privé became his next extension of his photographic process.

"I don't like to use terms like sexy, gorgeous, glamorous... Words are so easily thrown around to a point where the meaning is less meaningful. Besides that, I'd rather capture the individuality of women. I'd like the viewer of the photograph to see the provocative nature each woman has to offer. The beauty comes out naturally through our collaboration." -Ted Mishima
